Course Description: Most ADR, including mediation, is first discussed long after the lawsuit is commenced and after thousands of hours and dollars have been spent "fighting the fight." Why not consider the potential benefits of mediation before or shortly after the litigation is started? The presenters and moderator of this CLE will attempt to answer that very question, from the perspective of the parties, counsel and the mediator. In doing so, the panel will address such topics as: parties' self-determination, confidentiality, time and cost savings, risk avoidance, preservation of relationships, among other related topics.
